READING RETREAT

COME TO THE READING RETREAT!

March 6 and 7, 2004

If you haven't participated, please think about it for 2004. Many recent Reading Retreat participants have said "This is most valuable part of the course."

Participants find that the many current articles reviewed in the Reading Retreat provide an enriched background for information presented at the course the following week. They also become familiar with many sources that expert faculty cite in their lectures.

Participants always enjoy the exchange of ideas in the friendly, non-threatening atmosphere of a small group.

Please see reverse side of brochure for further Reading Retreat information.

USC faculty collect recent articles from medical publications that are relevant to clinical practice. The articles are sent to retreat participants several weeks in advance of the program. Participants are assigned one or two articles to read carefully and to present informally to the group, and are asked to become familiar with all the articles.

Discussion with colleagues and faculty follows each presentation. Participants always enjoy the exchange of ideas in the friendly, non-threatening atmosphere of a small group. We believe you will find this to be an excellent learning experience.
